FREQUENT QUESTIONS

What is the time commitment?

We ask that members of the Leaders Council attend two full board meetings per year, one of which is in-person. In addition, members will be assigned a committee that meets several times a year (typically 4-6), mostly often via phone or virtual meeting.

When are meetings held?

Full board meetings take place in the fall and spring, with the fall meeting in-person and the spring meeting online. Committee meetings are scheduled at the discretion of the committee chair and are intended to work with the committee members' schedules.

What are the current committees?

Current standing committees include Membership; Diversity, Equity and Inclusion; Fundraising; Community Engagement; and Events.

How long is a term on the Leaders Council?

The initial term is four years beginning on July 1 and may be extended for an additional four-year term.

Do I have to live in North Carolina?

No. We welcome candidates from across the United States and beyond and are actively recruiting for members outside of North Carolina.

Do I have to be an alumnus?

No. While the Leaders Council is largely comprised of College of Design alumni, we welcome interest from design professionals and industry partners who are dedicated to the mission of the College of Design and can demonstrate involvement, commitment, and support to the college over a four-year term.

What is the financial commitment?

We encourage members to contribute to the College of Design in a way that is meaningful for them. This philanthropic amount may be different from everyone, but we ask for 100% participation from our board.

Do I have to ask people for money?

There are ways for everyone to be involved in fundraising for the College of Design, from making introductions to your network to hosting events and thanking donors. In addition, we have a fundraising committee that reaches out to strategically raise money for the college with the help of the college's development team.
